Examples of specific details include:

- providing discretion for the DOA to market shellfish aquaculture when funding allows;
- relieving the PSP from the responsibility of designating Puget Sound partners;
- removing the requirement that the State Parks maintain recycling containers that are emptied daily at at least 40 parks;
- recognizing that the DOE's noise program is defunct;
- allowing the DNR to maintain a list of fees collected in a manner deemed efficient and effective; and
- allowing the DFW to estimate the costs of capacity salmon production only when asked to do so by the Office of Financial Management.

The substitute bill removes provisions from the original bill, or makes changes to provisions not included in the original bill, relating to the following:

- annual instream flow reporting by the DOE;
- biennial reporting from the DOE regarding water banking;
- annual reporting by the DFW on fishing industry statistics;

Staff Summary of Public Testimony:

(In support) These are minor government reform options that, collectively, are intended to untie, somewhat, the hands of the agencies and provide some flexibility and cost savings to allow the agencies to focus on their priorities and frontline services. Each change has a small effect, but perhaps collectively they will amount to some current and future savings. These are small steps towards trying to take some legislatively-mandated bureaucracy out of agencies.

(Opposed) None.
