Background:

This analysis was prepared by non-partisan legislative staff for the use of legislative members in their deliberations. This analysis is not a part of the legislation nor does it constitute a statement of legislative intent.

The programs administered by the Department of Labor and Industries (L&I) include contractor registration, electrician and plumber credentialing, boiler and unfired pressure vessel permitting, and wage complaint investigations. Under these and other programs, the L&I must send various notices using types of mailing specified in law. The Employment Security Department also must send various notices relating to administration of unemployment insurance. The required mailing methods for notices for these agencies include certified mail, registered mail, and first-class mail.

Certified mail and registered mail are services offered by the United States Postal Service (Post Office). With certified mail, the sender receives a receipt stamped with the date of mailing. The recipient's signature is obtained at the time of delivery and a record maintained by the Post Office. A return receipt provides evidence of the recipient, the date of delivery, and the recipient's signature. Registered mail uses a system of receipts to monitor the movement of mail from acceptance to delivery.

The departments of Information Services and General Administration offer services to state agencies to track mail.
