Staff: Luke Wickham (786-7146).

Background:

Children in out of home care could be in various living arrangements ranging from foster care, relative care, kinship care, and guardianships. Children placed in foster care are in the legal custody of the Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS). Most guardianships allow a guardian to make decisions regarding social and extracurricular activities and allow a guardian to sign as a parent.

The DSHS established guidelines for foster child activities that foster parents are to use in determining whether to allow children in their care to participate in daily and overnight activities. For example, an out of state vacation requires prior DSHS approval and either parental approval or notification depending on the legal situation. These guidelines also provide direction regarding who can watch foster children when foster parents are away from home. In general, foster children must be cared for in their own foster home by a person over the age of 18 with an acceptable criminal history check or in the home of another childcare or foster care provider. Certain activities, like participation in sports, motorized activities, field trips, driving, and employment require either DSHS or parental notification or approval.

The Secretary of DSHS is required to conduct background checks for those who will or may have unsupervised access to children.

Summary of Bill:

Caregivers have the authority to provide or withhold permission without prior approval of the caseworker, the DSHS, or court to allow a child in their care to participate in normal childhood activities based on a reasonable and prudent parent standard. This permission must comply with provisions included in a safety plan established by the DSHS. Background checks are not required for individuals who will have unsupervised access to children based on the reasonable and prudent parent standard.

Normal childhood activities include extracurricular, enrichment, and social activities, and may include overnight activities outside the direct supervision of the caregiver for periods over 24 hours.

The reasonable and prudent parent standard is the standard of care used by a caregiver in determining whether to allow a child in his or her care to participate in normal childhood activities. This standard is characterized by careful and thoughtful parental decision-making that is intended to maintain a child's health, safety, and best interest while encouraging the child's emotional and developmental growth.

Caseworkers must discuss the child's interest in and pursuit of normal childhood activities in their monthly health and safety visits and describe these in the Individual Service and Safety Plan.

Neither the caregiver nor the DSHS may be held liable for injuries to the child that occur as a result of caregivers deciding to allow a child to participate in normal childhood activities unless the action or inaction of the caregiver or the DSHS resulting in injury constitutes willful or wanton misconduct.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Requested on January 30, 2014.

Effective Date: The bill takes effect 90 days after adjournment of the session in which the bill is passed.
