Background:

Department of Corrections Health Care

One of the most significantly rising costs in our prison system is inmate health care. Since 1986, the health care expenditures for inmates in prison have almost tripled. Costs have risen from $10.97 million in 1986 to $33.3 million in 1994. This represents an increase of 86 percent in the average annual expenditure per offender for health care. These costs are expected to continue to rise as medical costs inflate, the prison population grows, and an increasing number of inmates become older and need additional health and long-term care.

Currently the Department of Corrections' policy is to "provide, at a minimum, a degree of care which is designed to reasonably respond to an inmate's serious medical and dental needs." Class action litigation has helped shape this policy and the health care services that the state is required to provide under it. The department is required to pay for all the health care needs of inmates attended to under this policy. Health care provided by the Department of Corrections can be grouped into four broad types of care as follows:

- Medical care to meet inmates' serious medical needs
- Basic dental care
- Mental health treatment and counseling
- Drug and alcohol rehabilitation

Medical co-payments have been found to reduce health care expenditures by discouraging overutilization and inappropriate use of health care services and are an important part of health care reform.

Currently, inmates who receive health care in state prison are not required to pay in part or in full for their health care. They are also not required to pay co-payments for each medical visit.

Summary of Bill: The Department of Corrections is authorized to charge inmates nominal co-payments of at least $3 per visit for offender-initiated, non-emergency health care services. Payments are collected directly from an inmate's institution account by the superintendent. Services and over-the-counter medications are not refused because of an inmate's inability to pay.

Inmates are required to purchase, by unit dose, all over-the-counter medications from the inmate store.
