House Committee on Law & Justice
Senate Committee on Law & Justice

Background: Superior court clerks are required by law to collect specified filing fees. The amount of the fee depends on the nature of the action and nature of the document to be filed.

Most of the fees collected are subject to division. For example, fees collected for filing abstracts of judgments from other courts are divided between the county and the public safety and education account, whereas fees collected for filing adoption petitions are divided between the county, the public safety and education account, and the county or regional law library fund. In contrast, the county retains all the fees for filing petitions to modify divorce decrees.

During the 1995 session, legislation was enacted that restructured the statutes governing fees collected by superior court clerks. However, some inconsistencies in the fee statutes remain. Specifically, two separate provisions impose a filing fee of $25 for a petition for determination of water rights. Under one provision, the fee is to be split between the county, the public safety and education account, and the county or regional law library fund. Under the other provision, the county retains the entire fee. Two separate provisions also impose filing fees for nonjudicial probate disputes. One provision imposes a fee of $20, and the other imposes a fee of $2.

The 1995 Legislature also passed a law creating a $35 filing fee for petitions concerning the validity of nonconsensual common law liens, and another law providing for the filing of a Department of Labor and Industries notice of debt due for compensating a crime victim. The latter law did not specify the amount of the filing fee. However, the filing fee for initial filings in civil actions is $110. Neither law specified whether filing fees were to be divided or, if so, how.

Summary: The provision requiring the filing fee for a petition for determination of water rights to be split between the county, the public safety and education account, and the county or regional law library fund, is deleted. The $20 filing fee for nonjudicial probate disputes is also deleted.

The $35 filing fee for petitions concerning the validity of nonconsensual common law liens is to be divided between the county and the public safety and education account. The filing fee for a notice of debt due for compensating a crime victim is explicitly set at $110, to be divided between the county, the public safety and education account, and the county or regional law library.
