HOUSE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

Meeting Date: February 15, 1999.

Bill Analysis Prepared by: Susan Morrissey (786-7111).

Background: The Department of General Administration is responsible for the disposal of surplus personal property— belonging to the state. Surplus computers fall within the definition of personal property used in this context. Before selling or exchanging the personal property, the department must attempt to discover whether it is needed by another state agency. If not, the law permits the department to sell or exchange the personal property or to donate it to certain shelters for homeless persons. The donated personal property must be used to meet the needs of the homeless persons in the shelter.

In rule, the department has adopted a priority list for disposing of personal property belonging to the state. The first priority is sale or transfer to state agencies, including state colleges and universities. Second priority is sale or transfer to other tax-supported educational agencies.

In addition, another law allows the state and any of its political subdivisions to sell, transfer, exchange, lease, or otherwise dispose of any property to another agency of local, state, or federal government. The law describes a process for the disposal of personal property with an estimated value above $50,000.

Summary of Bill: Any agency belonging to the executive, legislative, or judicial branches of state government may donate surplus computers and computer-related equipment to school districts and educational service districts. The Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction and the Department of General Administration will jointly develop and distribute guidelines to implement this authority. The guidelines will consider issues of quality, need, and accountability. The guidelines must be distributed by September 1, 1999.

The Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction may distribute surplus computers donated to school districts and educational service districts by state agencies.
