Background:

A worker who, in the course of employment, is injured or suffers disability from an occupational disease is entitled to benefits under Washington's industrial insurance law. These benefits include proper and necessary medical and surgical services from a physician of the worker's choice. The health services that are available to an injured worker also include chiropractic care and evaluation.

When a workplace accident occurs, the worker must report the accident to the employer, and the employer must report the accident to the Department of Labor and Industries if the accident involves treatment, hospitalization, disability, or death. On receiving the notice, the department must send the worker a notice of his or her rights in nontechnical language.

Summary of Bill:

By January 1, 2002, the Department of Labor and Industries must modify certain notices to specify the worker's right to receive health services from the physician of his or her choice, including chiropractic services, and must include in the notice a list of the types of providers authorized to provide these services. These requirements apply to the notice the department sends to an injured worker after the department receives the notice of an accident and the form used to apply for industrial insurance benefits. Forms containing the modified notices must be in use by the department and self-insured employers by July 1, 2002.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Available.

Effective Date: The bill takes effect January 1, 2002.

Testimony For: (Original bill) Too often an injured worker doesn't know of his or her right to receive health services from a provider of the worker's choice. The bill will have a large impact on the practice of employers directing injured workers to certain providers. This has been a problem for several years and the department has not taken steps to correct it. The bill is not intended to expand what services health providers are allowed to offer and that reference should be removed from the bill. The provision that allows the employer to direct the worker to a provider at the time of the accident should be limited. This authority should only apply when the worker is incapacitated and should only permit directing the worker to an emergency room. The department has plans to revise most existing publications to reflect the intent of this bill.

Testimony Against: (Original bill) The bill does not add anything to the notice already given to injured workers about their industrial insurance rights. If employers are directing workers to certain providers, the employers should be penalized for a violation of the statute. This bill could create more liability for employers, especially small employers, who fail to document giving the new notice to workers. Employers are more concerned about getting help to the injured worker than determining what legal notices have to be given. If the department revises the currently required notices, that should solve the problem.
