Background:

A person summoned by any trial court for jury duty is required to be available for up to one month to report for jury service. This one-month on-call period is known as the jury term.— During that one-month jury term, the person summoned may be required to report to the court house. The period of time that the person must spend at the court house is known as the period of juror service.—

With one exception, the period of juror service:

- may not extend beyond the end of the one-month jury term; and
- may not exceed two weeks.

These two limitations on the period of juror service may be exceeded if necessary to complete a trial to which the person has been assigned as a juror.

Summary of Amended Bill:

The court may, for good cause, excuse a juror from any remaining jury term once he or she has completed a trial or two days of service.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Available.

Effective Date of Amended Bill: Ninety days after adjournment of session in which bill is passed.

Testimony For: The national standard for jury service is actually one day or one trial. However, since some Washington counties are already using two days or one trial, the Board for Judicial Administration is recommending that as the rule in this state. The current system keeps people on call— for too long and is a disincentive for people to serve.

Testimony Against: None.

Testified: Senator Kline, prime sponsor; and Judge Daniel Berschauer, Board for Judicial Administration.
