Background: Washington's major business tax is the business and occupation (B&O) tax. The B&O tax is imposed on the gross receipts of business activities conducted within the state, without any deduction for the costs of doing business. All business activities are subject to B&O tax unless there is a specific exemption or deduction.

There is a B&O deduction for dividends received by a parent corporation from its subsidiaries. There is also a deduction for the investment of income of all persons other than those "engaging in banking, loan, security, or other financial businesses." In other words, only banking, loan, security and "other" financial businesses pay B&O tax on investment income. Private investors are not taxed. Investment income received by nonfinancial businesses is not taxed.

There has been some question and litigation over what "other financial business" means for B&O tax purposes. The state Supreme Court has defined a financial business as one that meets both of these requirements: (1) the business has a primary purpose of earning income through utilization of significant cash outlays, and (2) the business is comparable to a banking, loan, or security business. This interpretation was most recently applied in the Simpson Investment Company case decided in July 2000, where the court held that Simpson Investment was a financial business.

During the 2001 session, the Legislature considered a number of proposals in response to the Simpson decision, and enacted legislation that was intended to delay any change in the manner or extent of taxation of certain investment income as a result of that decision. This legislation was vetoed by the Governor. However, the Governor directed the Department of Revenue to adhere to the spirit of the vetoed bill and to not change or expand the application of the law to include activities that were not previously subject to tax. He further directed the department to work closely with all affected parties to develop a new proposal for consideration by the Legislature. The department formed a task force and held several meetings during the interim between legislative sessions. The task force recommended legislation to the Governor.

Summary of Bill: The term "other financial business" is no longer used for B&O tax purposes. Instead, tax is specifically applied to banking businesses, lending businesses, security business, loans or the extension of credit, revolving credit arrangements, installment sales, and the acceptance of payment over time for goods or services.

Banking business means a national or state-chartered bank, a mutual savings bank, a savings and loan association, a trust company, an alien bank, a foreign bank, a credit union, a stock savings bank, or a similar entity chartered under banking laws.

Lending business means making secured or unsecured loans of money, or extending credit, when more than one-half of gross income is earned from such activities and more than one-half of the business's total expenditures are incurred in support of such activities.

Security business means a securities broker, dealer, or broker-dealer, as those terms are defined in securities regulation laws. Mutual funds, family trusts, and other collective investment vehicles are not securities businesses, and are not subject to B&O tax.

The existing deduction for dividends received by a parent from its subsidiary is modified to expressly include distributions from capital account. These dividends and distributions are also deductible when received from subsidiary entities that are not corporations.
