Background: The certificate of need (CON) program is operated by the Department of Health under direction of the secretary's designee. A certificate of need is required before a health care facility can be constructed, sold, purchased or leased or before a health care provider can offer certain new or expanded services. Some examples are: construction or sale of a hospital or an increase in the number of licensed hospital or nursing home beds. The purpose for a certificate of need process is to ensure that new services proposed by health care providers are needed within a particular region.

Criteria for the review of a certificate of need application are different for health maintenance organizations (HMO's) and other health care providers.

An HMO is a public or private organization which makes health care services available to enrolled participants and is further defined in state law.

facilities, and (for hospitals) whether the hospital meets or exceeds the regional average level of charity care as well as other factors.

An HMO CON application is not subject to the previously listed criteria. Instead, an HMO CON application must be approved by the department if the department finds: CON approval is required to meet the needs of the HMO's current and future members and the HMO is unable to provide its services in a reasonable and cost effective manner consistent with the basic method of operation.
