Background: The superior courts of Washington State are authorized to charge fees, known as "filing fees" for their various proceedings. Revenue from civil case filing fees is split between the local county - 68 percent - and the state Public Safety and Education Account (PSEA) - 32 percent.

From the local portion of filing fees, a county treasurer deposits certain amounts into a county or regional law library fund.

The PSEA was created by the Legislature in 1984 to receive the state's share of revenues from court fines and forfeitures, as well as fees. By statute, money in the account is to be used for traffic safety education, highway safety, criminal justice training, crime victims' compensation, judicial education, the judicial information system, winter recreation parking and state game programs.

Under the U.S. Constitution, the state and local governments are required, in most criminal proceedings, to pay for the defense of persons found to be indigent. In civil cases there is no such requirement. However, in recent decades non-profit legal assistance programs have received public funding, primarily federal, for civil representation of indigents.

Summary of Bill: Filing fees for certain Superior Court proceedings are increased as follows:

Civil actions: current - $78, proposed - $110;
Civil appeals: current - $78, proposed - $110;
Demand for jury of six: current - $25, proposed - $50;
Demand for jury of twelve: current - $50, proposed - $100;
Answer to complaint: current - $48, proposed - $80;
Probate: current - $78, proposed - $110; and,
Contesting Will: current - $78, proposed - $110.

The current split of these revenues, 68 percent to counties and 32 percent to the PSEA, is changed to 54 percent to counties and 46 percent to PSEA.

No funds made available under the act to qualified legal aid programs are to be used to bring class action lawsuits. The amounts a county treasurer deposits into a county or regional law library fund from filing fees are increased as follows:

Amount deposited from Superior Court civil actions, civil appeals, and probate filings: current - $7, proposed - $12; and,
Amount deposited from district court civil filings: current - $3, proposed - $6.

With approval of the local legislative authority the amount deposited may be increased from Superior Court filings: current - $9, proposed - $14.

Representation of indigent persons in civil cases is added to the list of activities eligible for funding from the PSEA account. The Department of Community Development is directed to contract with qualified legal aid programs, defined in the bill, for civil representation of indigents.

The bill is made null and void unless at least $2.4 million is appropriated for indigent representation in the supplemental operating budget.

Fiscal Note: Available.

Effective Date: Ninety days after the adjournment of the session in which the bill is passed.

Testimony For: The population of low-income persons in need of civil legal assistance has increased while federal funding has effectively declined. Funding from interest on lawyers' trust accounts (IOLTA) and pro-bono work by private attorneys are both important, but insufficient to meet the increased need. Legal services lawyers do high-quality work and develop expertise in family, public benefits, landlord-tenant and other issues frequently faced by low-income individuals; they are a resource for private lawyers doing pro-bono work. Their work helps the court system by allowing an orderly presentation of the issues. Legal services corporations are often the only recourse, and only source of access to the judicial system, for low-income individuals. Legal services corporations take primarily cases that involve individuals in jeopardy, situations such as a family facing eviction. The $22 increase in civil filing fees will not work a hardship because it is typically paid just once or twice a lifetime. The bill preserves the 68 percent/32 percent split of fees between counties and the PSEA.
