Background: As part of the Oil Spill Prevention and Response Act of 1991, the Legislature made reckless operation of a tank vessel and operation of a tank vessel while under the influence of drugs or alcohol a crime. These criminal provisions were codified as part of the law governing pilotage. The laws governing pilotage exclude from their coverage certain vessels that are under enrollment or United States or Canadian vessels engaged in the coasting trade. These exemptions create a potential that a person operating a tank vessel or a vessel which is exempt from the pilotage provisions might also not be subject to the criminal penalties for reckless operation of a tank vessel or operation of a tank vessel while under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

Summary of Bill: The statutes establishing the crimes of reckless operation of a tank vessel and operation of a tank vessel while under the influence of drugs or alcohol are recodified as part of the oil spill prevention and response statutes.
