Background: The amount of basic workers' compensation disability and death benefits paid monthly to injured workers or beneficiaries is based on a percentage of the worker's wage at injury. The percentage varies depending on the marital status of the worker and the number of children. The minimum amount is specified for each worker's status. The maximum amount is limited to 100 percent of the state average monthly wage.

Summary of Bill: The maximum monthly disability or death benefit payable to an injured worker or beneficiary is increased from 100 percent to the following percentage of the state average monthly wage:

Percent	Effective date
----------------	-----------------------

133 1/3 July 1, 1991
166 2/3 July 1, 1993
200 July 1, 1995

The minimum benefit schedule is deleted and minimum benefits are established at the following percentage of the state average monthly wage:

Percent	Effective date
15	July 1, 1991
25	July 1, 1993
35	July 1, 1995

Fiscal Note: Available.

Effective Date: The bill contains an emergency clause and takes effect July 1, 1991.

Testimony For: Injured workers who earn wages at higher wage levels are treated unfairly by the current maximum benefit schedule. These workers not only lose a large percentage of their income when they are injured, they also do not get compensation for the loss of fringe benefits. The 1974 National Commission on Workers' Compensation recommended that all states provide benefits at 200 percent of the state average wage. This change is needed to compensate injured workers more appropriately for the economic losses caused by their injuries.

Testimony Against: It is difficult for employers to control costs in the industrial insurance system because employers have so few choices in providing insurance. Any changes that are made in the benefit structure should give employers choices and the opportunity to participate in claims management, and should also recognize that industrial insurance benefits are tax-free.
