Background:

The parent-child relationship is governed by the Uniform Parentage Act (UPA). The UPA was adopted by Washington in 1975 and became effective in 1976. In 2002, the UPA was repealed and the UPA of 2002 was adopted. The UPA of 2002 was significantly the same as the older version, but made changes to the procedures for establishing paternity. The UPA statute has become virtually the exclusive procedure used for the determination of paternity.

To determine the existence of a father-child relationship, the UPA distinguishes between a presumed father, an acknowledged father, and an adjudicated father.

A presumed father may contest the presumption through a proceeding in court to adjudicate parentage or through the statutory process of denial of paternity. Under the statutory denial of paternity process, a court proceeding to adjudicate parentage is not required. Rather, the denial becomes effective upon the birth of the child or the filing of the document with the state registrar of vital statistics, whichever occurs later.

A person who has signed an acknowledgement or denial of paternity may rescind the acknowledgement or denial of paternity by commencing a court proceeding to rescind before the earlier of (a) 60 days after the effective date of the filing of the acknowledgement or denial, or b) the date of the first hearing in a proceeding to adjudicate an issue related to the child.

Summary of Substitute Bill:

The bill removes language in the statute authorizing rescission of the acknowledgement or denial of paternity. The current law permits the rescission upon the earlier of two dates. One of the two dates is 60 days following the effective date of the filing of the acknowledgment or denial. Because the effective date of the acknowledgment or denial can be either the birth of the child or the filing of the acknowledgment or denial, the current language of the rescission statute may not be accurate. The removal of the words "of the filing" may clarify the meaning of "effective date."

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Not requested.

Effective Date: The bill takes effect 90 days after adjournment of session in which bill is passed.

Testimony For: (In support on HB 2562) This bill is meant to clarify the law to have certainty. There is a possibility the law can be read as having no time limit when denial of paternity can be filed. We want the issue of parentage resolved early, while the child is young, for certainty and support and not later just because an adult wants it changed. It has been assumed that there was already a two-year time limitation because it is the equivalent of an adjudication and an adjudication has a two-year time limitation.

Testimony Against: None.

Persons Testifying: (In support on HB 2562) Judge Marlin Appelwick, Uniform Legislation Commission.

Persons Signed In To Testify But Not Testifying: None.
