Background: Concern continues to be expressed that federal, state, and local permits required for the purpose of protecting the environment can be time-consuming, conflicting, inconsistently applied, and redundant, without accomplishing their purpose or adequately involving the public.

Summary of Bill: The Washington Regulatory Improvement Project is created as a collaborative effort of private industry, state universities, and government to improve economic competitiveness and environmental protection by revising and streamlining environmental permitting processes. The project may develop recommendations for programmatic permits, watershed-based environmental mitigation, new approaches to environmental permitting, and opportunities for improving public participation and environmental outcomes. Additional direction for each of these is given. Quarterly progress reports will be made.

The project will consist of members representing the state Legislature, the Office of Regulatory Assistance, the state natural resource agencies and Department of Transportation, cities, counties, ports, environmental interests, and the business community. Federal agencies, Indian tribes, state universities are invited to participate.

Recommendations for funding from public and private sources will also be developed.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Available.

Effective Date: Ninety days after adjournment of session in which bill is passed.

Testimony For: There are a number of regulatory improvement efforts under way, but there needs to be one whose products would be more generally applicable than TPEAC and have a broader scope than ORA. The concept of a larger effort is a good one, but the existing efforts need to be integrated into it and not discarded. The intent of this proposal is good, but the scope is too great. The existing efforts could be modified, instead of adding a new one. We need to focus on effectiveness, as well as efficiency.

Testimony Against: None.

Testified: Senator Swecker, prime sponsor, (pro); CONCERNS: Kristen Sawin, AWB; Claire Hesselholt, Office of Regulatory Assistance; Ivy Sager-Rosenthal, WA PIRG; Jerry Smedes, NW Environmental Business Council.
