House Committee on Higher Education

Background: The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA), signed into law by President Bush on December 19, 2003, as a complete revision of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act (SSCRA) provides a number of significant protections to federal service members or National Guard members called into federal service aimed at postponing or suspending certain civil obligations while the service member is deployed. For example, provisions in the SCRA allow the termination of preservice lease agreements, provide protection from evictions, cap interest rates on preservice loans, stay civil lawsuits, and allow the termination of preservice automobile leases.

The SCRA does not contain any provision regarding tuition refunds for service members called into duty.

Summary: A student at a postsecondary education institution that is ordered to active state service or active federal service for more than 30 days and provides the requisite notice is entitled to: (1) withdraw from courses without negative annotation on their record and have tuition and fees credited to the person's account at the institution; (2) be given an incomplete and the ability to complete the course upon release from duty; or (3) continue and complete the course for full credit with any classes missed due to performance of military service counted as excused absences and not used in any way to adversely impact the student's grade. If the student chooses to withdraw, he or she has a right to be readmitted and enrolled without penalty at the institution within one year following release from military service.

The student is also entitled to receive a refund of amounts paid for room, board, and fees attributable to the time the student was serving in the military and did not use the facilities for which the amounts were paid.

Language regarding the rights of students called into active military duty is placed in higher education statutes so that public institutions of higher education must adopt policies that comply with the provisions of the act. Private schools are encouraged to provide students called into active military duty the same rights and opportunities provided by public schools.

A provision is added to the Deed of Trust Act (RCW 61.24) stating that all of the rights and duties conveyed under the federal SCRA apply to deeds of trust under Washington law. No interest or penalties may be assessed for the period of April 30, 2003 through April 30, 2005 on delinquent 2003 or 2004 property taxes for military personnel that participate in Operation Enduring Freedom.
