responsible for roadway surfaces and shoulders; slope stability; route markers and directional signs; traffic control signals; and snow plowing, when necessary.

In 1991, a task force was created to study the maintenance responsibilities for local streets designated as part of the state highway system, and to reexamine the population threshold at which maintenance responsibilities shift from the Department to cities and towns. As a result of the task force's recommendations, the Legislature raised the population threshold from 15,000 to 22,500.

Once a city or town is determined to have exceeded the threshold, the transfer of maintenance responsibilities takes effect three years from the date of the determination. During this time, cities and towns may plan for additional staffing, budgetary, and equipment requirements.

Summary of Bill:

The population threshold at which cities and towns must assume additional responsibility for their streets that are part of the state highway system is raised from 22,500 to 25,000.
