account. Other benefits are pooled within the unemployment system. These "socialized costs" include "non-charged benefits."

An employer must re-employ eligible persons following certain military service under federal and state laws. A person who vacates a position of employment for service in the armed forces or the National Guard is eligible for re-employment if he or she satisfactorily completes his or her service, serves four years or less, and applies for re-employment and returns to his or her job within specified time periods. There are several exceptions to the re-employment requirement.

Summary of Bill:

An employer may request that the employer's experience rating account not be charged for benefits paid to a former employee who was:

- hired to replace another employee who is a member of the military reserves or the National Guard and was called to federal active military service by the President; and
- laid off when the other employee is re-employed upon release from active duty within the time provided in the state law establishing re-employment rights.
