that outlines the responsibilities of affected local governments in the event of a campus emergency; and establishing a task force to examine campus security and safety issues at least annually.

These institutions are also required to report information related to campus security under the federal Higher Education Opportunity Act of 2008. This federal law updated and expanded campus security reporting provisions for higher education institutions contained in the federal Clery Act. The 2008 law added, among other provisions: new categories to the list of hate crimes all institutions must disclose; a new disclosure regarding the relationship of campus security personnel with state and local law enforcement agencies; implementation and disclosure of emergency notification and evacuation procedures; and implementation and disclosure of missing student notification procedures for institutions with on-campus student housing.

Staff Summary of Public Testimony:

(In support) This bill deals with the problem of duplicative reporting requirements, and in particular, such requirements related to campus safety. It points to a larger problem: an abundance of reporting requirements that are costly and may not achieve the Legislature's original intent. This change provides efficiency but also provides accountability.

There are federal reporting requirements that address campus safety. Institutions take campus safety very seriously to make sure students, staff, faculty, and visitors are safe. It is important that students be able to access crime statistics to maintain safety. In addition, institutions that fail to comply with federal requirements may face revocation of their rights to participate in student financial aid programs.

There has also been work with the Department of Ecology to address duplicative greenhouse gas emissions reporting requirements at the administrative level.

(Opposed) None.
