Background: A child who is dependent may be placed in out-of-home care by the Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS). A dependent child is a child who has been abandoned, abused, or neglected by a person legally responsible for the child's care; who has no parent or guardian capable of adequately caring for the child; or who is receiving extended foster care services.

Summary of Bill: A caregiver for a child placed in out-of-home care by DSHS has the authority to provide or withhold permission to allow a child in their care to participate in normal childhood activities without prior approval of a caseworker, DSHS, or court, based on a reasonable and prudent parent standard.

Normal childhood activities include but are not limited to extracurricular, enrichment, and social activities, and may include overnight activities outside the direct supervision of the caregiver for over 24 hours.

A reasonable and prudent parent standard is characterized by thoughtful parental decision making intended to maintain the child's health, safety, and best interest while encouraging the child's emotional and developmental growth. Authorizations must comply with the provisions of a safety plan developed by DSHS. Neither the caregiver nor DSHS may be held liable for injuries to a child based on authorizations under the reasonable and prudent

Staff Summary of Public Testimony: PRO: Normalcy for youth in foster care is an issue we hear about every year. There are significant barriers for youth in foster care to participate in experiences that intact families take for granted. This bill empowers foster parents to provide natural parental guidance, and extends them the trust to do the job they are licensed to do. Right now foster parents do not have the authority to authorize a haircut or a trip outside the county. Other states, including Florida and California, have already implemented this. Many foster kids are at an age where they are learning new skills, participating in extracurricular activities, and making lifelong friends. The foster care system has features that prevent these foster kids' lives from being normal, such as requiring social workers to sign permission slips for field trips, or to allow them to go over to friends' houses. The social worker is not the best person to make this call, because the social worker does not know the child as well as the foster parent and may only see the child once per month. When the social worker does not get back to the child quickly, the child misses out on opportunities. We are hoping to improve the speed of decision making. This is a good bill to make foster kids lives more normative. We have a few concerns about the way the bill is drafted. There should be an upper limit of 72 hours on the time foster parents may authorize the child to be away from home without involving the social worker. Some youth are missing out on activities that are really important for their growth, development, and socialization. We need to figure out how to keep from going too far, but also make sure we are not preventing youth from going to their school gymnastics tournaments.
