SENATE COMMITTEE ON HUMAN SERVICES & CORRECTIONS

Staff: Brandon Popovac (786-7465)

Background: In 2001, the Legislature directed the Washington State Institute for Public Policy (WSIPP) to study the prevalence and needs of families who are raising related children. In June 2002, WSIPP issued a report describing the prevalence and characteristics of kinship care, needs of kinship care providers in the state, policies and services available in Washington and other states, and policy options that may increase appropriate kinship care placements.

In 2001-2002, a Kinship Caregivers Workgroup and Task Force for Kinship Care were formed and made a number of recommendations to the Legislature, including for DSHS to expand efforts to locate kin for children in need of services and that special efforts should be taken to assist kin in their interaction with DSHS when providing services to children.

In 2003, the Legislature directed DSHS to implement strategies to increase the number of children placed with willing and able relatives when out-of-home placement is required. At a minimum, DSHS was required to develop a standardized, statewide protocol to be used for relative search activities, and develop a policy for conducting active outreach efforts to identify and locate relatives during initial and ongoing searches. Kin was and remains defined as any person 18 years of age or older to whom a child is related by blood, adoption, or marriage, and means any persons denoted by the prefix grand or great, a full, half, or step sibling, an uncle or aunt, a nephew or niece, or a first cousin.

In 2017, the Legislature authorized DSHS to purchase legal representation for parents of children who are dependent or at risk of being dependent to establish a parenting plan when necessary for the child's safety, permanence, or well-being, but that such authority does not create an entitlement for the receipt of legal representation.

On July 1, 2018, the Department of Children, Youth, and Families will assume child welfare services from DSHS.

Summary of Bill: DSHS may purchase legal representation for kinship caregivers of children who are dependent or at risk of being dependent for the purposes of establishing other relevant civil legal relationships. Legal representation purchased by DSHS for kinship caregivers is not an entitlement.

DSHS is encouraged to work with the office of public defense parent representation program and office of civil legal aid to develop a cost-effective system for providing civil legal representation for parents and kinship caregivers.

Staff Summary of Public Testimony: PRO: The best placement for a foster child is with a relative. Kinship caregivers do not receive the same benefits that other non-relative foster parents receive. For every one child in foster care there are eight in the care of a relative. The objective of the bill is to achieve stability for children. The state currently does a good job of placing kids with relatives. Many kinship caregivers are attempting third-party custodies, which can be expensive and time consuming. In Washington State, over 39,000 children are being raised by 43,000 caregivers. About 80 percent of kinship caregivers are providing care due to parental addiction issues. The bill will help caregivers to achieve permanency to get kids out of the system and keep them out of the system. Some caregivers have to file for non-parental custody to achieve a form of permanency. Legal representation is the second highest request among caregivers after financial need. Third-party custody paperwork is difficult for caregivers to navigate. Some local clinics are extremely overbooked for legal services. Kinship caregivers keep children safe from parents that are unable to care or support them. The Center for Children & Youth Justice has been conducting a pilot project for the last two years that is addressing issues covered under the bill. About one-third of families served under the pilot project are kinship caregivers. There is inconsistency among counties in providing legal services for caregivers. It can take an additional three to six months of legal representation for cases involving certain parenting plans. Clarifying amendments are needed for the bill to move forward. The kinship caregiver definition should include the extended family member definition under the Indian Child Welfare Act. The bill should have no fiscal impact since it does not create an entitlement to legal representation.
