Background:

Employer Insurance Obligations.

Under the state's workers' compensation laws, employers must either insure through the State Fund administered by the Department of Labor and Industries (Department) or, if qualified, may self-insure. Self-insurance is a program in which the employer, the self-insurer, provides any and all appropriate benefits to the injured worker.

Self-insurers manage some aspects of injured worker claims, including closing certain types of claims. Self-insurers must maintain records of all payments of compensation and provide to the Director of the Department all information the self-insurer has relating to a disputed claim. Self-insurers may contract with a third-party administrator (TPA) to administer claims.

All employers are required to keep, report, and make available certain records related to workers' compensation. Physicians and certain nurses are required to file a report to the Department within five days of treatment.

Penalties.

Employers are subject to penalties for violations of various workers' compensation requirements. Penalties include those assessed against a self-insurer that unreasonably delays or fails to pay benefits, or any employer that:

- fails to pay premiums;
- misrepresents the amount of payroll or employee hours;
- fails to keep, file, or provide adequate records and reports; or
- fails to comply with a Department rule.

Penalty amounts include the following:

- the greater of $500 or 25 percent of the amount due, for a self-insurer who unreasonably delays or refuses to pay benefits;
- the greater of $500 or double the amount of premiums incurred, for failure to pay premiums;
- a maximum of $500 for failure to comply with a Department rule; and
- a maximum of $250 for various recordkeeping and reporting violations.

Certain knowing or intentional violations, such as misrepresentation of payroll or hours, are subject to additional penalties.

Physicians and certain nurses are subject to a maximum penalty of $250 for failure to file a required treatment report.

Summary of Substitute Bill:

Self-Insured Employers.

Self-insured employer's options for claims administration are specified. The Department must license third-party administrators and issue related rules. Third-party administrators must maintain certification.

Penalties.

Employer penalties are increased to be a maximum of:

- the greater of $1,000 or 25 percent of the amount due, for a self-insurer who unreasonably delays or refuses to pay benefits;
- the greater of $1,000 or double the amount of premiums incurred, for failure to pay premiums;
- $1,000 for failure to comply with a statutory provision or Department rule; and
- $500 for various recordkeeping and reporting violations, including a physician's failure to file a required treatment report.

The assessment of penalties for a self-insurer's failure-to-pay is specified to be per act and requires the Department to weigh certain factors. The Department may waive first-time or de minimus violations of recordkeeping and reporting provisions.

All penalties must be adjusted every three years based on changes in in the Consumer Price Index. .

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Available.

Effective Date: The bill takes effect on September 1, 2020, except sections 8 and 9, relating to fair conduct and licensure of claims administrators, which take effect July 1, 2021.

Staff Summary of Public Testimony (Labor & Workplace Standards):

(In support) The original grand compromise of the workers' compensation system was not intended to be the adversarial system it has become. This bill will make sure the intent of that original compromise is honored. Some employers chose self insurance even though the workers are public employees. The TPAs often delay and fail to act in the best interests of the employee, and the absence of regulation maximizes the resulting harms. Lack of communication and delays after an injury can lead to worsening of a condition. For a firefighter with post-traumatic stress disorder, this can mean they have to battle for what they are owed. The fines under the bill would still be nominal, and an employer acting in good faith should not have concerns. The fines have not been updated since 1985 and have not kept up with the cost of living.

(Opposed) The bill creates a new duty to workers that is more akin to that owed by a labor union. The application of the new duty is unclear and would inappropriately import issues and legal standards from other types of insurance law. The Department already has this duty, and claim managers, not TPAs, have the authority and make all the decisions on TPA claims. It is in the employer's best interest to ensure their injured workers are treated properly. The TPAs work collaboratively with employers and claims managers, and the bill would jeopardize that collaboration and collaboration with workers. The Workers' Compensation Advisory Committee was created to vet proposals such as this one to ensure there is balance for the system as a whole. The penalty amounts under the bill are substantial. The original grand compromise of workers' compensation did not assume the process would not be controversial. The bill does not distinguish between state fund insurers and self-insurers. The bill does not address accountability in the Department's audit methods. The bill is unnecessary; there is an existing penalty process, ombuds office, and recent rulemaking addressing efficiencies and better communication in this area.

Staff Summary of Public Testimony (Appropriations):

(In support) This bill aims to level the playing field between workers and employers. It modernizes penalties on self-insured employers, which were last updated 35 years ago. Third-party administrators influence workers' claims experience. The bill gives the Department the ability to address the conduct of third-party administrators, many of which are located out of state. The Industrial Insurance Act is the remedy for workers injured on the job and this bill imposes a responsibility of fair conduct on the process. This bill would not use General Fund dollars. The changes in committee are expected to reduce the fiscal note. There will be more revenue as a result of the new penalty.

(Opposed) None.
