(EMS) personnel are certified by the Department of Health (DOH). There are four primary categories of EMS personnel—paramedics; emergency medical technicians (EMTs); advanced EMTs; and emergency medical responders, also known as first responders. Emergency medical services personnel may only provide services within the scope of care established in the curriculum of the person's level of certification or any specialized training.

Emergency Medical Technicians. Emergency medical technicians are licensed by DOH upon completion of approved training and association with an EMS agency, a law enforcement agency, a business with an organized safety team, or as instructors or coordinators with approved EMS training programs. An EMT is defined as a person who is authorized by the Secretary of Health to render emergency medical care or under the responsible supervision and direction of an approved medical director to participate in a community assistance referral and education services program.

Ambulance Services. An ambulance service or aid service must be licensed by DOH to operate in Washington. Ambulance services and aid services meeting the following exceptions do not have to be licensed:

- services operated by the United States government;
- ambulance services providing service in other states when bringing patients into this state;
- owners of businesses where ambulance or aid vehicles are used exclusively on company property; and
- operators of vehicles pressed into service for transportation of patients in emergencies when licensed ambulances are not available or cannot meet the overwhelming demand.

Summary of Bill: An EMT may participate in an emergency services supervisory organization (ESSO) under the responsible supervision and direction of an approved medical program director, if the participation does not exceed the participant's training and certification. An ESSO is an entity that provides medical evaluation or initial treatment to sick or injured people in the course of duties, including law enforcement agencies, disaster management organizations, search and rescue operations, diversion centers, and businesses with industrial safety teams. The ESSO must provide medical oversight and protocols that enable the EMT to meet certification and training requirements and provide the EMT with necessary medical equipment. An ESSO may provide unlicensed ambulance services or aid services.
