Background: The Insurance Contract. An insurance policy is a contract between the insured and the insurance company and establishes what the company agrees to do in exchange for the premium paid by the insured. The contract also describes the insured's responsibilities and general terms of coverage. The contract is divided into a declarations page and the policy itself.

The Declarations Page. The declarations page, commonly referred to as a "dec sheet," includes basic details of the insurance contract and typically includes the policy number, the effective dates, the address of the insured property, the mortgage holder, the coverages, coverage limits, the premium, and any discounts.

The Insurance Policy and Limits of Coverage. The insurance policy is the entire insurance contract, and includes the insuring agreements, definitions, and conditions. For a homeowner's insurance policy, a description of the property coverage and the loss it covers, as well as liability coverage, will be provided. There may be an exclusions section of the policy, which outlines specific coverages or perils not covered by the policy. Typically flood and earthquake coverage are excluded from homeowners and renter's policies unless purchased as an endorsement or rider. An endorsement or rider addresses issues or items not in the original contract and can be added to a homeowner or renter's policy, life insurance policy, or auto insurance policy.

Insurance policies may also have limits of coverage providing the insured the largest dollar amount covered for different types of losses, and sublimits which further limit that coverage. For example, a policy may have a dollar limit for personal property, with an additional limit within that amount for certain items, such as computers.

Summary of Bill: The declarations page on residential policies must include a listing of all sublimits of coverage within the insurance policy, including any endorsements, and show either the amount of coverage, the percentage of coverage, or both, that is being limited below the overall policy coverage limits. The entire declarations page must be delivered to the insured at every policy renewal.

Residential policies include homeowners, renters, condominium, mobile home, and manufactured home noncommercial insurance policies.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Requested on January 5, 2022.

Creates Committee/Commission/Task Force that includes Legislative members: No.

Effective Date: Ninety days after adjournment of session in which bill is passed.
