Background:

United States Department of Energy Home Energy Score.

The Home Energy Score was developed by the United States Department of Energy to provide homeowners, buyers, and renters directly comparable and credible information about a home's energy use. The Home Energy Score report estimates home energy use, associated costs, and provides energy solutions to cost effectively improve the home's efficiency.

United States Department of Energy—Home Energy Auditor Qualification Certification Programs.

Homeowners who obtain a home energy audit may be eligible for certain tax credits at the federal level, including the Energy Efficient Home Improvement Credit. In order to qualify for the tax credit, the home energy audit must have been prepared by a home energy auditor who has been certified by one of the qualification certification programs approved by the United States Department of Energy. Multiple qualification certification programs are currently approved by the United States Department of Energy, including, among others:

- ASHRAE Building Energy Assessment Professional;
- Association of Energy Engineers Certified Energy Auditor; and
- Building Performance Institute Home Energy Professional Energy Auditor.

Summary of Bill (Third Substitute):

Cities and counties may require that the owner of a single-family residence obtain and make available a home energy performance report before the residence may be publicly advertised for sale. If a city or county requires a home energy performance report, the home energy audit must comply with the requirements established in the bill.

A home energy performance report required by a city or county pursuant to this section must include certain information, including:

- a home energy score, using the methods developed by the United States Department of Energy;
- an estimate of the total monthly or annual cost of energy purchased for use in the residence in dollars, by fuel type, based on the current average annual retail residential energy price of the utility serving the covered building at the time of the report;
- the amount of greenhouse gas emissions associated with the energy consumption of the residence, in tons per year by fuel type, with at least one comparison measure that provides context for the range of potential scores; and
- the identification of the most significant energy efficiency improvements with respect to the residence.

A home energy performance report required by a city or county must be prepared by a qualified home energy auditor certified by a qualification certification program approved by the United States Department of Energy.

By November 30, 2024, the Department of Commerce must develop, maintain, and make available a standardized format for home energy performance reports.

The format of a home energy performance report must comply with the home energy performance report format developed by the Department of Commerce.

Third Substitute Bill Compared to Second Substitute Bill:

Compared to the second substitute bill, the third substitute bill:

- removes the requirement that the Department of Commerce adopt by rule the asset-based home energy score developed by the United States Department of Energy;
- removes provisions establishing a state licensing program for home energy assessors;
- authorizes cities and counties to require that the owner of a single-family residence obtain and make available a home energy performance report before the residence may be publicly advertised for sale;
- requires home energy performance reports, where required by a city or county, to comply with certain requirements, including that the home energy performance report contain certain information regarding energy usage and efficiency improvements, and that the home energy performance report be prepared by a qualified home energy auditor certified by a qualification certification program approved by the United States Department of Energy; and
- requires the Department of Commerce to develop, maintain, and make available a standardized format for home energy performance reports.
