Background:

Water Code—Civil Enforcement.

Washington's water code specifies a sequence of enforcement measures the Department of Ecology (Ecology) must follow to achieve compliance with the state's water laws and rules. Ecology must first prepare and distribute technical and educational information to the general public to assist the public to comply with water rights and water law requirements. When it determines a violation has occurred or is about to occur, Ecology must first attempt to achieve voluntary compliance. If this is not successful, Ecology issues a notice of violation or a formal administrative order or assesses penalties unless noncompliance is corrected expeditiously or Ecology determines no impairment or harm has occurred. Ecology may take immediate action if in its opinion the nature of the violation is causing harm to other water rights or public resources.

Ecology may levy civil penalties of ranging from $100 to $5,000 per day for violation of the surface and ground water, minimum water flows and levels, and water supply facilities statutes. In determining the amount of the penalty, Ecology must consider the seriousness of the violation, whether the violation is repeated or continuous after notice is given of the violation, and whether any damage has occurred to the health or property of other persons. In situations involving the waste of water—a misdemeanor—Ecology may alternatively follow the sequence of enforcement actions specified in the water code.

Summary of Bill:

The Department of Ecology (Ecology) may not levy a civil penalty for a violation of the water code against a landowner if the actions of the landowner's lessee are the basis for the violation. In such cases, Ecology may levy the civil penalty against the lessee.
