SENATE COMMITTEE ON HUMAN SERVICES

Staff: Kelsey-anne Fung (786-7479)

Background: Food Services Program. The Department of Corrections (DOC) has internal policies governing its food services program to provide cost-effective, healthy, and quality meals in compliance with health and safety requirements. Cycle menus are prepared by DOC's food service administrator and registered dietitian to assist in ensuring food service requirements are met. Cycle menus include menus for certain diets, religious guidelines, meal portions, and nutritional analysis, among other things.

Religious Diets. According to agency policy, individuals in custody at DOC have the opportunity to select an initial religious diet at no cost during orientation at reception. Recognized religious diets are vegetarian, halal, and kosher. To receive a religious diet, a request must be submitted to the chaplain or their designee. Requested religious diets remain in place until the person requests that it be removed or changed. After the initial religious diet selection at reception, the person will be charged a fee anytime the person changes to a religious diet.

Therapeutic Diets. Per DOC policy, individuals who may require a therapeutic diet are identified through the health examination process or a nutritional assessment performed by a registered dietician. Recommended therapeutic diets take precedence over a religious diet, unless the individual declines during the medical encounter. If the person does not decline, the therapeutic diet remains in effect until it expires and the religious diet will resume.

Meals for Events. Meals for religious, cultural, diversity, and family-centered events must follow certain DOC policies. If requested, light refreshments and special menu items such as meal enhancements must be funded by participants, or the sponsoring cultural, diversity, or religious faith group, or both, 45 days in advance of the event. Deliveries and donations must be coordinated with DOC food service managers.

Summary of Bill: DOC must make reasonable efforts to accommodate religious diets in state correctional facilities based on the request of the incarcerated individual. Religious diets must be provided at no cost to the incarcerated person.

Reasonable efforts include, but are not limited to, coordination and arrangements with a partnering nonprofit organization in the provision and delivery of a religious diet, including special menu items, meal enhancements, and donated foods. DOC may establish reasonable deadlines for sponsorship and contribution of special menu items, but no deadline may exceed 30 days before a religious event.

If a therapeutic diet is recommended for the incarcerated individual, DOC must provide a therapeutic diet that also accommodates the religious diet requested by the incarcerated individual.

Staff Summary of Public Testimony: PRO: There have been instances with organizations that want to bring foods into institutions because of religious celebrations, but the incarcerated individual has to choose between a therapeutic diet and a religious diet. A person cannot have a therapeutic diet that also meets their religious needs. Supporting religious practices and traditions are positive benefits for everyone and it helps build community, support well-being, and reduces violence. Facilities are safer for staff and the incarcerated when opportunities are provided for individuals to participate in religious practices and celebrations that are meaningful to them while they are serving their sentence.

There have been instances where individuals of Jewish faith had to choose between having a religious diet and a medical diet. A kosher meal should actually meet the requirements of orthodox law according to the Jewish religion.

OTHER: Honoring and respecting the religious beliefs and practices of incarcerated individuals is integral to fostering a positive and rehabilitative environment. It is important for people to have that choice and have access to meals that align with their religious beliefs and practices. Some provisions of the bill would require significant resources.

Persons Testifying: PRO: Senator Claire Wilson, Prime Sponsor; Matthew Perry, Jewish Prisoner Services International.

OTHER: Danielle Armbruster, Department of Corrections; Jamie Dolan, Department of Corrections.
