Staff Summary of Public Testimony: PRO: This bill is about giving Washington a clear, shared direction for how we grow our economy. We have many strong economic development efforts across the state, but too often they seem disconnected. This bill helps to bring those efforts together under one strategic statewide plan so we can be more intentional, more coordinated and much more effective. It directs the state to provide statewide data-driven economic development and competitive plan. It says clear goals and is updated regularly. And all of this matters because our economy is changing and our approach needs to be thoughtful, forward-looking and grounded in real information and data. At its heart, this legislation is about accountability and opportunity, making sure our investments support our workers, our small business, and our large business. It will connect communities across the state, so that all Washingtonians can help grow the economy.

Port districts are economic drivers in their communities, and ports have identified areas where state leadership could improve the current economic development mission of ports. Lack of available power, limited tools like tax incentives that we use to recruit companies, and a challenging regulatory climate are all issues we've identified. Ports look forward to working with growers, labor organizations, community members on a state trade strategy.

It's absolutely critical that the state establishes an economic development strategic plan and that the Department of Commerce has sufficient resources to implement a thoughtfully crafted, collaboratively developed plan, aligned with regional and local strategies. The bill requires the plan to be completed by November 1st of this year, which is too soon. OFM has informed the Department that it needs to use existing resources, but considering reductions last session, there needs to be a more significant investment in this effort.

For many employers, this bill offers a glimmer of hope in the current dismal economic climate right. This bill will allow Washington to take a more focused and coordinated approach to strengthening our economic competitiveness. Employers hope this strategic plan will address some of the key competitiveness issues the state is facing, especially with taxes.

OTHER: The full cost of developing an economic development strategy as delineated in the bill is not in the Governor's budget. The Department of Commerce works as a convener across economic sectors, assists small and under-resourced businesses, and attracts new companies and investments to Washington. It is critical that Washington keeps its competitive edge to allow for inclusive economic growth and development through a strategic intentional plan at the state level.
